1 INT. COFFEE HOUSE - DAY

Snowflakes dance outside the window. VIC (30s, paint-stained cuffs) sits alone in a small upholstered booth by the window, at one of those tiny marble tables, a coffee and the last bite of a Sachertorte in front of her. She writes in her notebook.

A shadow falls across her page. ELLIOTT (40s, wet hair, out of breath) squeezes into the booth opposite her.

ELLIOTT
You're early. Or I'm late.
One of those.

VIC
Both, probably.

Awkwardly, he wrestles out of his jacket while sitting and some melted snowflakes drip onto her notebook.

ELLIOTT
(noticing the note book)
Still trying to find the place your grandmother wrote about?

VIC
Found it. Now I'm trying to talk myself out of going.

2 EXT. SMALL STREET - LATER

VIC and ELLIOTT walk fast against the wind. A horse carriage with tourists moves by.

ELLIOTT
You know you don't have to decide today.

VIC
I know. I just don't want to decide tomorrow either.

She stops, looks into the window of an old book store.

VIC
Some doors you only get to knock on once.

3 INT. VIC'S APARTMENT - NIGHT

Pale light from the north window falls across an unfinished canvas. VIC puts her notebook down on her desk. She stands in front of it for a moment, coat still on, keys still in her hand.

VIC
(to herself)
Okay. Tomorrow, then.

She sets the keys down. Doesn't take the coat off.

FADE OUT.
